Get October Cosmopolitan Today

'HEN you buy this month's Cosmopolitan you will know why more than a million people wait and watch for the day that America's Greatest Magazine is placed on sale.

For here, between the covers of a single magazine, you will find more novels, more short stories, more special features by the greatest living writers than in any two other magazines on the stands this month.

To hundreds of thousands of people the name of Rupert Hughes stands for all that is best in short-story writing. Read his "Number, Please" in October Cosmopolitan.

What other author holds such a high place in the writing of short stories that take you into God's Country as James Oliver Curwood? His latest "Swift Lightning" story in October Cosmopolitan is one of his best.

Frank R. Adams was one of a very few men who went to France and brought the soul of France back with him. In "The Man Who Invented It" he tells how a proud, old American family received the French mother of their own son's little boy.

What other magazine of the month publishes stories as great as these, and others equally as great, by such writers as Perceval Gibbon, Frederic Kummer, Albert Payson Terhune and Jack Boyle?

These writers are regular contributors to Cosmopolitan, giving this magazine their best work. You will enjoy their stories in the October issue.

Are you reading Basil King's series of special features on "The Abolishing of Death?" Discussion of life beyond the grave occupies some of the world's greatest minds, and Mr. King, worldfamous novelist, is giving Cosmopolitan's readers the benefit of his sincere belief founded on a most convincing investiga-

You've heard and read a great deal about Japan's attitude towards this country. Kenneth L. Roberts, known the world over as one of the world's ablest special correspondents, attached himself to the American army in Siberia. He wrote "Oriental Irritants" for October Cosmopolitan. Read it and be surprised at what he tells you.

Novels? There are three appearing in Cosmopolitan.

Robert W. Chambers, Arthur Somers Roche and Peter B. Kyne are the authors. Do you know of any greater American novelists?

Poetry? Then read the beautiful poem by Ella Wheeler Wilcox who is often called America's premier poetess.

Inspiration? Turn to Meredith Nicholson's editorial "Efficiency of the Soul." It's one of the bits of literature you will read aloud to those dear to you.
